Do you really know who you are talking to?

ROMANCE FRAUD

Have they asked you to move off the dating app? And quickly move to another platform such as: Google hangouts, WhatsApp or email?

Do they always have an excuse for not meeting or speaking via a video chat?

Have they given you a "hard luck" story and asked for your financial help?

Shortly after meeting them on line, have they told you that they are madly in love and want a relationship?

Use these steps to keep yourself, and your loved ones, safe from fraudsters.

D

Don't rush into an online relationship – get to know the person, not the profile, ensuring you ask plenty of questions. The vast majority of romance fraud is initiated online.

A

Analyse their profile – protect yourself by confirming their identity. Check the person is genuine by putting the following into your search engine; their name, profile pictures and any repeatedly used phrases, along with the term 'dating scam'. Be mindful that a fraudster could be hiding behind an alias and have changed details connecting them to previous fraudulent activity.

T

Talk to your friends and family – be wary of anyone who tells you not to tell others about them. Romance fraud involves grooming over a long period of time. Alienating a victim from their friends and family can make up part of that process.

E

Evade scams – never send money or share your bank details with someone you've only met online. It doesn't matter how long you've been speaking to them or what story they give behind needing the sum.

S

Stay on the dating site messenger service – fraudsters will often encourage their victims to use different communication channels that are often undetectable. Be confident that you know who you're speaking to, and be wary if they fail to meet you in person.

Coronavirus Scam Warning
Watch out for these fake Tesco emails

Action Fraud has received 30 reports about fake emails that appear to be from Tesco. The email states that the recipient is offering free vouchers during the coronavirus outbreak. The link in the email leads to a generic-looking phishing website that is designed to steal login credentials as well as personal and financial information. Don't click on the links or attachments in suspicious emails and never respond to messages that ask for your personal or financial details.
